Airbnb 3Q26: No stopping this red wave

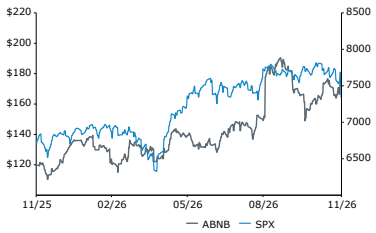

Airbnb's red wave continued: the pace of growth has doubled over the last year, alongside rising margins. That looks sustainable: ex-RNPL, the Q4 guide (LDD nights growth) is in line with Q3 on a two-year stack, despite some likely geopolitical headwinds. Then, the really big ideas are arguably still to come, including, inter alia, an AI agent in 1H27, loyalty, dynamic pricing, sponsored listings, Airbnb Living and expansion into "every vertical in travel". These should sustain or even accelerate momentum into 2027 and beyond. With the Q4 guide showing acceleration on top of acceleration, the argument that RNPL/NYC hotels were the only easy opportunities has surely weakened, and the acceleration looks increasingly structural. This likely leaves valuation and AI as the main pushbacks. Valuation in absolute terms still looks reasonable: it discounts only LDD revenue growth going forward, i.e. far slower than FY26, and is 24x our revised up 2028 EPS for >20% EPS growth, even without deploying all excess cash. Relative to other online travel companies, it is twice the multiple for twice the growth, with higher cash conversion, a clear product roadmap and less evidence that incremental investment is needed to fend off AI risk. AI risk is harder, but 60% unique supply, the fastest new-user growth among Gen Z, and Airbnb's own robust AI pipeline should mitigate much of the risk. Wave not breaking yet: Outperform.

Price Performance, 1YR

The Q: Growth mode indeed. Room nights grew 16%, nearly double the 2025 pace, while GBV grew 21%, the fastest pace in four years. These were 4% and 5% ahead of consensus and guidance respectively, showing the acceleration has continued despite now tougher comps. EBITDA posted its 24th straight beat since IPO, coming in 6% ahead, albeit with some help from marketing cost timing. Q4 guidance implies some slowdown to "at least" LDD room-night growth, but given it laps the first round of RNPL, has no World Cup benefit and faces some geopolitical headwinds in Europe/Middle East, this should still be taken well and sits ahead of consensus. More importantly, it implies the stronger growth trajectory is carrying into year-end rather than fading after the summer. Improved FY26 guidance plus a strong exit rate into FY27 means we raise FY26 and 27 EPS by 4.5%. We still model meaningful deceleration going forward, from 18% revenue growth in FY26 to 13% in FY27. That leaves room for further upside as the bigger ideas on the product roadmap roll out, and increasingly makes our estimates look like a base case rather than an aggressive one.

Investment Implications

HIGHLIGHTS FROM THE CONFERENCE CALL

Outlook

- Q4
  - GBV growth slows to the mid-teens from 21% in Q3. The comp is tougher and the RNPL lift to net nights is expected to fade as cancellations come through. Airbnb still expects at least low double-digit Nights and Seats Booked growth. Demand remains healthy in their view, and guidance assumes limited lasting disruption in France and the Middle East.
  - Revenue growth of 16–18% includes ~2pp of FX tailwind. Implied take rate should improve slightly YoY as the Q3 gap between RNPL bookings and revenue recognition partly reverses. Adjusted EBITDA is still expected to grow, but marketing spend pushed into Q4 weighs on margin.
- FY26 / 2027
  - The Q3 beat supported a raise to high-teens FY26 revenue growth and ~36% adjusted EBITDA margin. RNPL delays cash collection, so FCF margin is expected to come in modestly below EBITDA margin. The 2027 discussion centred on sustaining growth and reinvesting upside.

RNPL / pricing / take rate

- RNPL eligibility reached >40% of GBV after adding listings with limited and firm cancellation policies. It added ~3pp to Q3 net nights growth, at least 1pp more than in Q2. Guests booked earlier and chose higher-priced listings. Platform-wide cancellations rose to ~19% from ~16% YoY. Airbnb expected the net lift to peak in Q3 as cancellations come through later.
- Chesky sees dynamic pricing as potentially bigger than RNPL. On some nights, lower prices can lift occupancy enough to increase host earnings. Early host adoption described as strong. No figures given.
- The single service fee and guest insurance should modestly lift take rate over time. Insurance attach remains single digit but is up materially YoY.

Hotels

知识星球：前沿信息收录
VX:FCCNN88

- Hotels are growing markedly faster than core from a small base. Chesky sees a multibillion-dollar revenue opportunity in the coming years. Airbnb aims to retain users who would otherwise book hotels elsewhere. Higher hotel ADRs could also support paid acquisition.

- The mix of first-time and returning bookers is broadly in line with the platform. ~35% of guests whose first Airbnb booking is a hotel return to book a home within a year.

AI / distribution

- Travel agent rollout and external integrations via MCPs planned for H1'27. The agent will use maps, photos and itineraries alongside chat. Airbnb expects it to help with planning and post-booking tasks.

- Partner links let Airbnb test categories before bringing bookings in-app. Car rentals currently link out via CarTrawler. Airbnb wants to bring reservations in-app to capture more revenue, with added servicing responsibilities.

- Muse and Instinct traffic remained small and broadly flat for ~4 weeks after an early October peak. Bookings were immaterial against nearly 500k Airbnb bookings per day. Airbnb estimates >60% of its inventory is exclusive. Chesky sees external agents as potential referral channels.

Discovery / sponsored listings / loyalty

- More social features planned for 2027, including friends' stays and recommendations in search and maps. Airbnb plans to launch and refine the AI agent before deciding how sponsored listings fit.

- Loyalty under consideration. Chesky said Airbnb loses some travellers without a programme. More verticals strengthen the case.

CHANGES TO OUR MODEL

We update our model for Q3 results, company guidance and the latest FX. We take up FY26 numbers on the strong in Q performance and guidance. We underwrite stronger growth in FY27, with 13.4% revenue growth for the year, flowing through to our EBITDA and EPS numbers.
