Recalibrating Expectations | Buy the Dip

WHAT'S CHANGED

General Motors Company (GM.N)	From	To
Price Target	$101.00	$95.00

Yesterday's stock reaction was overblown in our view. GM hit 3Q expectations, reiterated/raised aspects of its 2026 guidance, and announced a $20bn share buyback. The softer 2027 outlook, which is primarily a result of a higher commodity backdrop, should have been broadly expected. Reiterate OW.

Key Takeaways

- GM hit consensus expectations in 3Q and reiterated the midpoint of the adj. EBIT guidance, while increasing adj. FCF.
- 2027 commentary was softer than last quarter's outlook, but not a major surprise given recent commodity inflation and discussions at industry conferences.
- A new $20bn buyback is a clear signal, in our view, that the company will increase the cadence of buyback in 2027 ($8-10bn on our est.), driving MSD EPS growth.
- Stock sell-off is overdone. Reiterate OW. Lower price target to $95 on moderating 2027 estimates, but still see significant room for multiple expansion.

Recalibrating expectations in the face of commodity and logistics inflation. GM's more cautious 2027 commentary should not come as surprise given the magnitude of the recent commodity and logistics inflation – this was also highlighted by the company at recent industry conferences. Management indicated that, should current input costs persist, the company could face ~$2bn of incremental Y/Y cost pressure in 2027, including $1-$1.5bn from annualizing the inflation experienced since July alone. The escalation in these external pressures has made the path to EBIT growth more challenging. In light of the current commodity environment, we are lowering our 2027 EBIT estimate to $15bn (flat Y/Y vs. $15.9bn previously).

Importantly, however, the underlying earnings tailwinds have not changed. GM continues to benefit from a favorable product cycle (MY27 truck refresh), including richer launch mix and incremental pricing opportunities associated with the next-generation Silverado/Sierra; additional capacity in high-demand SUVs and crossovers; continued warranty cost improvement; lower EV losses; and double-digit growth in software and services revenue. Additionally, corporate and fixed cost efficiencies, including AI-enabled productivity initiatives, could provide further offsets. Importantly, to date there has not been a deterioration in customer demand, despite elevated rates and gas prices – this is something we will be monitoring closely into 2027. To the extent the recent escalation in input costs proves transitory, we see clear upside to our revised 2027 earnings outlook as these company-specific tailwinds become more visible.

$20bn buyback authorization is a clear sign of management and the board's confidence in the outlook. GM's board authorized a $20bn multi-year share buyback authorization, after recently completing its prior $6bn authorization. While management has not committed to a specific repurchase cadence, we believe the message is clear: with the stock trading at a depressed valuation, expect GM to remain opportunistic and lean into its new authorization. Importantly, we see increasing capacity to accelerate buybacks in 2027 as the cash burden related to EV restructuring subsides. Specifically, EV-related payments to suppliers in 2027 is expected to decline by more than $3bn, creating additional flexibility even in an environment where there is no growth in EBIT and capex increases modestly. As such we are increasing our 2027 buyback assumption to $9bn, but see a clear upside case based on the distributable cash flow outlook (Exhibit 1).

Exhibit 1: 2027 Distributable Cash Bridge

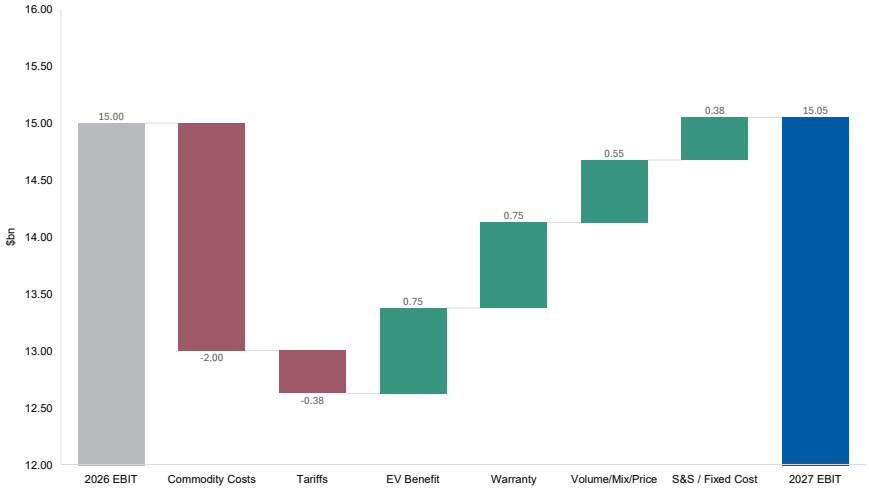

Source: Morgan Stanley Research estimates

Lowering our 2027 EBIT estimates, but buyback upside drives MSD EPS growth. Our framework to contextualize some of the moving pieces for the 2027 bridge is as follows. Tailwinds: (i) $0.5-$1bn improvement in EV losses (vs. $1-$1.5bn improvement in 2026), (ii) $0.5bn-$1bn improvement in warranty costs (vs. $1-$1.5bn improvement in 2026), (iii) $350-$750mn improvement from price/mix, (iv) $250-$500mn improvement from S&S growth and fixed cost savings. Headwinds: (i) ~$2bn of incremental commodity/DRAM/Freight costs assuming no change in forward curves, and (ii) $250-$500mn headwind from tariffs (non-repeat of $500mn IEEPA refund, less onshoring which reduces tariff bill). Note that the company has not provided official guidance; these are our preliminary assumptions.

How our estimates are changing (Exhibit 3). Lowering our 2027 EBIT estimate by 6% to $15bn to reflect the higher commodity cost environment. We believe the potential upside drivers are clear (i) an improved commodity cost outlook, (ii) a favorable pricing environment, particularly as GM approaches its truck changeover at the end of the year, (iii) further warranty improvement, or (iv) additional cost rationalization measures (AI integration into the organization). Lowering our PT to $95, reflecting the lower 2027 EBIT estimates, partially offset by a lower share count. Our $95 price target implies 6.7x our 2027 EPS estimate (vs. 7.0x previously).

OVERWEIGHT THESIS

At the macro level, GM will benefit from 1) reduced policy uncertainty, 2) the sunsetting of EV tax credits, and 3) expected rate cuts to help affordability in 2H26. Beyond the favorable macro setup, GM has demonstrated strong execution with industry-leading US inventory and incentive discipline and tariff mitigation efforts via supply chain re-alignment ($4bn investment in US) and go to market strategies, as well as a marked turnaround in International. Despite our expectation for moderating 2026 US SAAR, we expect GM to manage through with an appropriately re-aligned capital allocation strategy and refreshed product lineup highlighting strength in GM's core ICE trucks and SUVs.

BULL CASE $119.00

Implies 8.5x FY26 Bull Case EPS

Our $119 DCF-derived bull case implies ~8.5x our bull case 2026 EPS of $13.99 (~1.4x turn premium to base case). Beyond stronger earnings growth in the near-term, we believe multiple expansion will originate from GM's ability to advance personal autonomous driving (Super Cruise) and software and services offering. DCF assumptions include +2.3%/+3.0% revenue/EBIT (ex-GMF) CAGR to 2035 discounted at a 12.0% WACC and a 7.5x exit FCF multiple.

BASE CASE $95.00

Implies 7.1x FY26 Base Case EPS

Our DCF-derived $95 price target implies ~7.1x 2026 EPS of $13.42, which is a ~1.2x premium to current trading levels. DCF assumptions include +1.5%/+0.2% revenue/EBIT (ex-GMF) CAGR to 2035 discounted at a 12.0% WACC and a 4.0x exit FCF multiple.
