Gold falls c.5% as markets reprice renewed Fed tightening risks

Gold has fallen c.5% since early September as stronger-than-expected data and persistent inflation concerns revived expectations of further Fed tightening. Over this period, the US 10-year Treasury yield rose from c.4.8% to 5.3%+, the dollar index strengthened from c.100 to 102+, and gold declined from c.US$4,400+/oz to c.US $4,140/oz (Figure 1). The move echoes the hawkish repricing following Warsh's Jackson Hole remarks in late August, a risk we flagged in our August 31 note. Resilient growth and labour-market conditions have challenged expectations of continued easing, increasing the perceived likelihood of another rate hike by year-end and weighing on gold.

Much of the bad news appears priced in; early buying signals are emerging

We believe much of the recent hawkish repricing is now reflected in the gold price, with early signs of a more constructive entry point emerging. Following the correction, gold is consolidating around US$4,140–4,200/oz, while softer labour-market data released toward month-end and easing expectations of an October Fed rate hike suggest that the monetary-policy headwind may be starting to moderate. This does not yet confirm a durable bottom, but it supports our view that the balance of risks is becoming less negative. As we highlighted in our August risk note, gold had become vulnerable to hawkish policy surprises following its strong rally. After the subsequent pullback, we see greater scope for stabilisation if incoming data no longer justify further upward revisions to the expected policy path. Looking ahead, a sustained retreat in US Treasury yields from elevated levels would strengthen the case for a recovery in gold. In the past three episodes, gold gained c. 5.9%, 11.4% and 14.4% as 10-year Treasury yields declined from their October 2023, April 2024 and January 2025 highs to subsequent troughs, over 69, 144 and 81 calendar days, respectively (Figure 3). The catalysts differed across the three episodes. The late-2023 decline followed softer economic data and a reversal of the higher-for-longer repricing; the 2024 episode reflected labour-market cooling and growing confidence that policy easing was approaching; and the early-2025 decline coincided with moderating growth expectations and heightened policy uncertainty. The common feature was a reassessment of how restrictive monetary policy needed to remain, allowing Treasury yields to retreat and gold to recover. These observations illustrate the potential for gold to recover alongside lower yields. If labour-market cooling continues and oil prices stabilise, we would expect the case for additional tightening to weaken. A sustained easing in rate-hike expectations and Treasury yields would therefore provide stronger confirmation of the emerging buying opportunity, while renewed upside surprises in inflation or employment remain the key risk to our view. From a technical perspective, we see US$3,990–4,030/oz as the key near-term support zone (Figure 5). While gold remains below its short-term moving averages, much of the recent hawkish repricing appears reflected in the price. A decisive break below US$4,000/oz would suggest a deeper correction, while a sustained move above US$4,280–4,320/oz would represent a meaningful improvement in technical momentum and strengthen the case that the recent decline remains a consolidation within the broader uptrend.

Risk-reward has become less compelling; stay selective on gold miners

Gold miners have declined by c.4–18% since early-Sep, and we do not yet see uniformly attractive risk-reward across the sector. We therefore remain selective, with a preference for Wanguo > Zijin Gold > Zhaojin. Wanguo remains our preferred exposure, as robust volume growth should provide company-specific earnings support and help offset the impact of near-term gold price consolidation. We believe Zijin Gold continues to offer relatively high-quality operational delivery, although we remain watchful of cost inflation and production execution over the coming quarters, particularly given concerns around higher royalties and legacy accounting costs. For Zhaojin, the key near-term variable remains production recovery, with greater visibility needed on the pace of mine restarts following the recent accidents.

Valuation Method and Risk Statement

We base our price targets on a PE multiple.
Gold mining sector risks include weaker-than-expected gold prices if the Fed implements tighter-than-expected monetary policy, and disappointing progress of expansion plans. Upside risks include better-than-expected gold prices and higher-than-expected production volumes.
Wanguo Gold:
Our price target is based on 15x 2027E PE.
Downside risks include weaker-than-expected gold prices if the Fed implements tighter-than-expected monetary policy, and worse-than-expected progress of expansion plans on Gold Ridge mine delays. Upside risks include better-than-expected gold prices and higher-than-expected production volumes led by Gold Ridge mine.
Zhaojin:
Our price target is based on 10x 2027E PE.
Downside risks include weaker-than-expected gold prices if the Fed implements tighter-than-expected monetary policy or if Haiyu's expected progress is slower than expected. Upside risks include better-than-expected gold prices and higher-than-expected production volumes.
Zijin Gold:
Our price target is based on 20x 2027E PE.
Downside risks include weaker-than-expected gold prices if the Fed implements tighter-than-expected monetary policy, and worse-than-expected progress of expansion plans. Upside risks include better-than-expected gold prices and higher-than-expected production volumes.

This document is a general communication and is educational in nature; it is not an advertisement nor is it a solicitation or an offer to buy or sell any financial instruments or to participate in any particular trading strategy. Nothing in this document constitutes a representation that any investment strategy or recommendation is suitable or appropriate to an investor's individual circumstances or otherwise constitutes a personal recommendation. By providing this document, none of UBS or its representatives has any responsibility or authority to provide or have provided investment advice in a fiduciary capacity or otherwise. Investments involve risks, and investors should exercise prudence and their own judgment in making their investment decisions. None of UBS or its representatives is suggesting that the recipient or any other person take a specific course of action or any action at all. The recipient should carefully read this document in its entirety and not draw inferences or conclusions from the rating alone. The financial instruments described in the document may not be eligible for sale in all jurisdictions or to certain categories of investors.

Options, structured derivative products and futures (including OTC derivatives) are not suitable for all investors. Trading in these instruments is considered risky and may be appropriate only for sophisticated investors. Prior to buying or selling an option, and for the complete risks relating to options, you must receive a copy of "The Characteristics and Risks of Standardized Options." You may read the document at https://www.theocc.com/publications/risks/riskchap1.jsp or ask your salesperson for a copy. Various theoretical explanations of the risks associated with these instruments have been published. Supporting documentation for any claims, comparisons, recommendations, statistics or other technical data will be supplied upon request. Past performance is not necessarily indicative of future results. Transaction costs may be significant in option strategies calling for multiple purchases and sales of options, such as spreads and straddles. Because of the importance of tax considerations to many options transactions, the investor considering options should consult with his/her tax advisor as to how taxes affect the outcome of contemplated options transactions.

Mortgage and asset-backed securities may involve a high degree of risk and may be highly volatile in response to fluctuations in interest rates or other market conditions. Foreign currency rates of exchange may adversely affect the value, price or income of any security or related instrument referred to in the document. For investment advice, trade execution or other enquiries, clients should contact their local sales representative.

Investing in structured investments involves significant risks. For a detailed discussion of the risks involved in investing in any particular structured investment, you must read the relevant offering materials for that investment. Structured investments are unsecured obligations of a particular issuer with returns linked to the performance of an underlying asset. Depending on the terms of the investment, investors could lose all or a substantial portion of their investment based on the performance of the underlying asset. Investors could also lose their entire investment if the issuer becomes insolvent. UBS does not guarantee in any way the obligations or the financial condition of any issuer or the accuracy of any financial information provided by any issuer. Structured investments are not traditional investments and investing in a structured investment is not equivalent to investing directly in the underlying asset. Structured investments may have limited or no liquidity, and investors should be prepared to hold their investment to maturity. The return of structured investments may be limited by a maximum gain, participation rate or other feature. Structured investments may include call features and, if a structured investment is called early, investors would not earn any further return and may not be able to reinvest in similar investments with similar terms. Structured investments include costs and fees which are generally embedded in the price of the investment. The tax treatment of a structured investment may be complex and may differ from a direct investment in the underlying asset. UBS and its employees do not provide tax advice. Investors should consult their own tax advisor about their own tax situation before investing in any securities.

Important Information About Sustainable Investing Strategies: Sustainable investing strategies aim to consider and incorporate environmental, social and governance (ESG) factors into investment process and portfolio construction. Strategies across geographies approach ESG analysis and incorporate the findings in a variety of ways. Incorporating ESG factors or sustainable investing considerations may inhibit the portfolio manager's ability to participate in certain investment opportunities that otherwise would be consistent with its investment objective and other principal investment strategies. The returns on a portfolio incorporating ESG factors or sustainable investing considerations may be lower or higher than portfolios where ESG factors, exclusions, or other sustainability issues are not considered by the portfolio manager, and the investment opportunities available to such portfolios may differ.
